as possible! Purification and properties of glucose 6-phosphate dehydrogenase from a mutant bacterium: partial characterization of an ornithine-dependent mutant enzyme. The ornithine-dependent glucose 6-phosphate dehydrogenase from a mutant of Salmonella typhimurium was studied in relation to other bacterial enzymes of this enzyme class. This enzyme differs from the analogous enzyme in wild type organisms in several respects: it has a lower apparent  $K_m$  for NADP as substrate and a higher stability at 0 degrees C; it is more sensitive to urea; and some enzyme catalyses do not require a divalent cation.
