Q: Find the area enclosed between the curve and the two tangent lines I have the following question and I was able to solve it, but the solution in the book contains a mistake. The solution is as follows: So the solution I have is shown in red. The solution in the book however is shown in purple. I have figured out the first part (ignore the  $y$ -axis). The first part is simple and follows because the derivative of  $y^2$  is  $2y$ . So  $y' = \frac{y'}{y} (y') = \frac{2y'}{y}$ . After this point I have no clue on how to calculate the area. I have attempted using the formula  $\int f(x) dx$  however with this form I cannot understand how to split  $y$  into the  $x$  and  $y$  parts. My last attempt was to use the path  $y^2 + y'(x-c) = c$  which leads to  $y^2 + \frac{2y'}{y}(y-c) = c$  and  $dy = \frac{2dy}{y} + \frac{2dy}{y}(1-c/y^2) = dy + d(1-c/y^2)$ . Can anyone help me find the area or confirm that I am on the right track? A: Your first step in the right direction is  $\frac{dy}{dx} = \frac{y'}{y}$  However, instead of solving for area of the rectangle, you need to solve for the area under the curve which is found by  $A = \int y d(y^2) = \int y^2 dy$  1. Thu, 31 Mar 2015 04:51:37 +0000>Female Prefer Female Match Female Prefer Female Match is a form of dance that has become very popular on the YouTube platform. Usually, young girls usually communicate through social media such as twitter and Facebook with their fellow male companions and go on dates with them. Sometimes they arrive at the venue without a male companion and when they get there, they agree on a 7 or 10 minute time frame, sit in the front row and enjoy the performance. “If a female is already at the venue and is currently observed by a male audience, then it is likely that she will attract men to her.” If female audience is always present, then male audience will pass their time by looking at her, increasing the chance of them being observed by males. If a female is already at the venue and is currently observed by a male audience, then it is likely that she will attract men to her. It is also useful for homosexual males and females to display the clothes that are suited to them. Ex: strapless dresses are preferred by female audience when the female is wearing a dress, does the male audience feels the sense of belonging, it would promote confidence. Female audiences communicate with the male audience through small smile in the eyes during the performance. Bigger female audiences increase the possibility that more males would be attracted to the female audience. While smaller female audiences will attract fewer males because they are confident in themselves and feel safe, and so they can be less social. If females are made to sit in a row, the parallel point/aiming point of audience to the participants make male audience feel less nervous and sit and wait for the performance to begin; on the other hand, males would be more naturally interested to have fun when a
